Sonnet 29" is a poem written by the English poet and playwright William Shakespeare. It was most likely written in the 1590s, though it was not published until 1609. Like many of Shakespeare's sonnets, "Sonnet 29" is a love poem. It is also traditionally believed to have been written for a young man. Unlike some of Shakespeare's other love poems, however, which are concerned with physical beauty and erotic desire, "Sonnet 29" is about the power of love to positively affect one's mindset, as the poem argues that love offers compensation for the injuries and setbacks one endures in life.

"Sonnet 29" is, in part, a poem about isolation, envy, and despair. In the first eight lines, the speaker lists a series of anxieties and injuries, comparing himself negatively to more prosperous, successful, and beautiful people. The speaker thus suggests that his sense of self-worth depends on others: his social status and his emotional life are inextricably braided together, a combination the poem argues breeds only further isolation and discontent.

The poem begins with the speaker listing a series of misfortunes he has suffered. He describes himself as “disgrace[d]” and an “outcast,” and implies that he is hopeless, untalented, and ugly; that he lacks political influence; and that he no longer takes pleasure in the things he once enjoyed. It might seem, then, that the poem is responding to some catastrophe—say, a bankruptcy or a death in the family. But the speaker opens the poem with the word “when,” a conditional structure that frames the rest of the list of misfortunes the speaker supplies. He is not responding to a specific event but, instead, reflecting on something that happens to him often. This suggests that he often suffers from despair and anxiety; he often feels like an outcast and a hack.

Importantly, each of his complaints places the speaker in relation to other people. He compares his own beauty, wealth, and status to those around him—noting his “disgrace” in “men’s eyes,” wishing he were “featured [attractive] like him,” and envious of “this man’s art and that man’s scope.” The speaker clearly measures his own self-worth in relation to others. Given that he is so frequently despondent, the poem thus implicitly suggests that comparison is an unwise endeavor that results primarily in self-pity.

This self-pity, in turn, only serves to further separate the speaker from the rest of society; indeed, he bemoans how he “all alone” cries about his “outcast state” and resents those “with friends possessed.” Perhaps this is understandable; it’s difficult to deeply bond with people when relationships are plagued by envy and resentment. He also describes his relationship with other people in competitive terms: he does not want to share or collaborate with others, but instead wants to have more power, money, and influence than them.

The first eight lines of the poem thus pose an implicit question as to whether there are values that do not rely on hierarchy and competition to validate and assign worth. Regardless of the answer, it’s clear that defining oneself solely in relation to others does little to boost contentedness, confidence, or camaraderie

Sonnet 116

Q.What is the main theme of Sonnet 116?

A.The main theme is the nature of true love.

Q.How does Shakespeare define love in the sonnet?

A. Shakespeare defines love as a constant, unwavering force that is not altered by time or circumstances.

Q.What is the significance of the phrase "Let me not to the marriage of true minds"?

A.The phrase serves as a statement of the speaker's conviction that true love is a union of minds and hearts.

Q. What does Shakespeare mean by "love is not love which alters when it alteration finds"?

A.Shakespeare means that true love remains constant despite changes in circumstances or the beloved.

Q.What is the effect of the final couplet, "If this be error and upon me proved, / I never writ, nor no man ever loved"?

A.The final couplet serves as a statement of the speaker's conviction that his definition of love is true, and if proven wrong, he will renounce his writing and the idea of love itself.

Q. What image does Shakespeare use to describe the power of love in line 9?

A.Shakespeare uses the image of a "star" to describe the power of love.

Q.What does the "tempests" symbolize in line 6?

A. The "tempests" symbolize the challenges and difficulties that true love can withstand.

Q. What poetic device does Shakespeare use in the line "Which alters when it alteration finds"?

Sonnet 29" is a poem written by the English poet and

This sonnet attempts to define love, by telling both what it is and is not. In the first quatrain, the speaker says that love—"the marriage of true minds"—is perfect and unchanging; it does not "admit impediments," and it does not change when it finds changes in the loved one. In the second quatrain, the speaker tells what love is through a metaphor: a guiding star to lost ships ("wand'ring barks") that is not susceptible to storms (it "looks on tempests and is never shaken"). In the third quatrain, the speaker again describes what love is not: it is not susceptible to time. Though beauty fades in time as rosy lips and cheeks come within "his bending sickle's compass," love does not change with hours and weeks: instead, it "bears it out ev'n to the edge of doom." In the couplet, the speaker attests to his certainty that love is as he says: if his statements can be proved to be error, he declares, he must never have written a word, and no man can ever have been in love.

Along with Sonnets 18 ("Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?") and 130 ("My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun"), Sonnet 116 is one of the most famous poems in the entire sequence. The definition of love that it provides is among the most often quoted and anthologized in the poetic canon. Essentially, this sonnet presents the extreme ideal of romantic love: it never changes, it never fades, it outlasts death and admits no flaw. What is more, it insists that this ideal is the only love that can be called “true”—if love is mortal, changing, or impermanent, the speaker writes, then no man ever loved. The basic division of this poem’s argument into the various parts of the sonnet form is extremely simple: the first quatrain says what love is not (changeable), the second quatrain says what it is (a fixed guiding star unshaken by tempests), the third quatrain says more specifically what it is not (“time’s fool”—that is, subject to change in the passage of time), and the couplet announces the speaker’s certainty. What gives this poem its rhetorical and emotional power is not its complexity; rather, it is the force of its linguistic and emotional conviction.

The language of Sonnet 116 is not remarkable for its imagery or metaphoric range. In fact, its imagery, particularly in the third quatrain (time wielding a sickle that ravages beauty’s rosy lips and cheeks), is rather standard within the sonnets, and its major metaphor (love as a guiding star) is hardly startling in its originality. But the language is extraordinary in that it frames its discussion of the passion of love within a very restrained, very intensely disciplined rhetorical structure. With a masterful control of rhythm and variation of tone—the heavy balance of “Love’s not time’s fool” to open the third quatrain; the declamatory “O no” to begin the second—the speaker makes an almost legalistic argument for the eternal passion of love, and the result is that the passion seems stronger and more urgent for the restraint in the speaker’s tone.

write the summary of the poem

Or

Discuss the main idea or central idea of the poem

The poem explores the speaker's longing to be with his beloved, comparing their separation to a shipwreck. He yearns for the comfort of her presence, describing her as his guiding star and anchor.

The speaker reflects on the pain of their separation, using imagery from nature to convey his emotions. He concludes by expressing his hope for their reunion, when he can once again bask in her love and beauty.

"Amoretti 78" is a traditional sonnet, consisting of 14 lines, with a rhyme scheme of ABBA ABBA CDCD CD. The poem is written in iambic pentameter, with a consistent pattern of five feet (syllables) per line.

The poem is rich in imagery and symbolism, with a focus on nature and maritime themes. The speaker compares their separation to a shipwreck, with the beloved as the guiding star and anchor. The image of the shipwreck conveys the idea of being lost and helpless without the beloved.

The poem also features imagery from the natural world, such as the "rocks" and "waves" that threaten the speaker's emotional well-being. The beloved is described as a "haven" and a "refuge", emphasizing her role as a source of comfort and safety.

The poem explores several themes, including:

1. Longing and separation: The speaker's longing for the beloved is a central theme of the poem.
2. Love as guidance and comfort: The beloved is portrayed as a guiding star and anchor, emphasizing her role in providing comfort and direction.
3. Nature and the human experience: The poem uses imagery from nature to convey the speaker's emotions and experiences.

The tone of the poem is melancholic and introspective, with a focus on the speaker's emotional pain and longing. The mood is contemplative and reflective, with a sense of yearning and anticipation.

"Amoretti 78" was written during the Elizabethan era, a time of great literary and cultural flourishing in England. The poem reflects the literary conventions of the time, including the use of traditional sonnet forms and imagery from nature.

In Edmund Spenser's Amoretti, the poet expresses his concern that other poets may be competing with him for the attention of a "fair youth". However, he believes that his verses have a prior claim because he was the first to praise the youth in poetry. He also believes that the youth's "sweet graces" are central to his sonnets, unlike the work of other poets.

The lover misses his beloved, but finds no solace in looking around outside himself where she has been, places he remembers her. So he turns instead within himself, to consider who she really is and how he loves her, rather than looking around just to see her.

As You Like It by Shakespeare is a romantic comedy that explores themes of love, disguise, and the value of the natural world. The play centers around Rosalind, who is exiled from court by her uncle, Duke Frederick, and flees to the Forest of Arden with her cousin Celia. There, she disguises herself as a young man, Ganymede, and meets Orlando, who has also come to the forest seeking refuge from his cruel brother, Oliver. Through a series of encounters, Rosalind and Orlando fall in love, and Rosalind, in her disguise, uses this as an opportunity to help Orlando overcome his love-sickness. The play unfolds with several other characters experiencing similar romantic pursuits and eventual resolution, culminating in a grand wedding at the end.

Act I: The Usurpation and the Flight

The play begins with a lively scene at Duke Frederick's court, where Duke Senior, the rightful ruler, has been usurped by his brother. Duke Senior, while staying at court, is unable to fully support his daughter Rosalind due to the situation. Rosalind, with her wit and intelligence, is close friends with Celia, Duke Frederick's daughter, and they are inseparable.

The first act also introduces the character of Orlando, who is mistreated by his brother Oliver, who, unlike Orlando, is favored by their father. Orlando is planning to enter a wrestling match against Charles, a strong wrestler, to prove himself. Celia and Rosalind are watching the wrestling match when Orlando defeats Charles, and Rosalind falls for him, but keeps her feelings a secret. Orlando is also in danger, and the two decide to flee to the forest of Arden.

Act II: The Forest of Arden and the Pursuit of Love

In the Forest of Arden, Duke Senior and his followers, including the cynical Jaques, live a simple life, enjoying the freedom and beauty of nature. Rosalind and Celia, disguised as a young man (Ganymede) and a shepherdess (Aliena), find themselves immersed in this new world, and Rosalind begins to work on Orlando to cure him of his love-sickness. She pretends to be a love advisor, and Orlando is eager to follow her advice.

Meanwhile, Oliver, tormented by feelings of guilt and regret for his treatment of Orlando, sets out to find him. He encounters Orlando, who has saved him from a lioness, and they reconcile. Oliver also meets Celia and falls in love with her.

Act III: Love, Disguise, and Misunderstandings

As Orlando spends time with Ganymede, they grow closer, and he falls even more deeply in love with her. Rosalind, in her disguise, is also falling in love with Orlando, but is unable to reveal her true identity.

Another character, Phoebe, a shepherdess, also falls in love with Ganymede (Rosalind), and she is in love with Silvius, who is infatuated with Phoebe. The play also introduces Audrey, a goatherd, and Touchstone, the court jester, who also fall in love with each other. This creates a series of romantic entanglements and misunderstandings, adding to the humor and charm of the play.

Act IV: Reconciliation and Resolution

As the play progresses, the characters navigate the complexities of love and disguise. Rosalind uses her intelligence and charm to guide Orlando and Oliver to happiness, and she patiently deals with the various misunderstandings caused by her disguise.

Duke Frederick, after a period of anger and distress, is converted to Christianity, and he decides to return the throne to his brother, Duke Senior, ending the usurpation. This leads to a joyful reunion of the characters, and a series of weddings that include Rosalind and Orlando, Celia and Oliver, and Touchstone and Audrey. Phoebe and Silvius are also reunited, and everyone enjoys the newfound happiness and harmony.

The Epilogue

The play concludes with an epilogue, spoken by Rosalind, who, while still in disguise, expresses her love for the audience and her hope that they have enjoyed the play. She asks the audience to imagine a world where love and happiness prevail, and she encourages them to embrace the joys of life and love.

Two tribunes, Flavius and Murellus, find scores of Roman citizens wandering the streets, neglecting their work in order to watch Julius Caesar's triumphal parade: Caesar has defeated the sons of the deceased Roman general Pompey, his archrival, in battle. The tribunes scold the citizens for abandoning their duties and remove decorations from Caesar's statues. Caesar enters with his entourage, including the military and political figures Brutus, Cassius, and Antony. A Soothsayer calls out to Caesar to "beware the Ides of March," but Caesar ignores him and proceeds with his victory celebration (I.ii.19, I.ii.25).

Cassius and Brutus, both longtime intimates of Caesar and each other, converse. Cassius tells Brutus that he has seemed distant lately; Brutus replies that he has been at war with himself. Cassius states that he wishes Brutus could see himself as others see him, for then Brutus would realize how honored and respected he is. Brutus says that he fears that the people want Caesar to become king, which would overturn the republic. Cassius concurs that Caesar is treated like a god though he is merely a man, no better than Brutus or Cassius. Cassius recalls incidents of Caesar's physical weakness and marvels that this fallible man has become so powerful. He blames his and Brutus's lack of will for allowing Caesar's rise to power: surely the rise of such a man cannot be the work of fate. Brutus considers Cassius's words as Caesar returns. Upon seeing Cassius, Caesar tells Antony that he deeply distrusts Cassius.

Caesar departs, and another politician, Casca, tells Brutus and Cassius that, during the celebration, Antony offered the crown to Caesar three times and the people cheered, but Caesar refused it each time. He reports that Caesar then fell to the ground and had some kind of seizure before the crowd; his demonstration of weakness, however, did not alter the plebeians' devotion to him. Brutus goes home to consider Cassius's words regarding Caesar's poor qualifications to rule, while Cassius hatches a plot to draw Brutus into a conspiracy against Caesar.

That night, Rome is plagued with violent weather and a variety of bad omens and portents. Brutus finds letters in his house apparently written by Roman citizens worried that Caesar has become too powerful. The letters have in fact been forged and planted by Cassius, who knows that if Brutus believes it is the people's will, he will support a plot to remove Caesar from power. A committed supporter of the republic, Brutus fears the possibility of a dictator-led empire, worrying that the populace would lose its voice. Cassius arrives at Brutus's home with his conspirators, and Brutus, who has already been won over by the letters, takes control of the meeting. The men agree to lure Caesar from his house and kill him. Cassius wants to kill Antony too, for Antony will surely try to hinder their plans, but Brutus disagrees, believing that too many deaths will render their plot too bloody and dishonor them. Having agreed to spare Antony, the conspirators depart. Portia, Brutus's wife, observes that Brutus appears preoccupied. She pleads with him to confide in her, but he rebuffs her.

Caesar prepares to go to the Senate. His wife, Calpurnia, begs him not to go, describing recent nightmares she has had in which a statue of Caesar streamed with blood and smiling men bathed their hands in the blood. Caesar refuses to yield to fear and insists on going about his daily business. Finally, Calpurnia convinces him to stay home—if not out of caution, then as a favor to her. But Decius, one of the conspirators, then arrives and convinces Caesar that Calpurnia has misinterpreted her dreams and the recent omens. Caesar departs for the Senate in the company of the conspirators.

As Caesar proceeds through the streets toward the Senate, the Soothsayer again tries but fails to get his attention. The citizen Artemidorus hands him a letter warning him about the conspirators, but Caesar refuses to read it, saying that his closest personal concerns are his last priority. At the Senate, the conspirators speak to Caesar, bowing at his feet and encircling him. One by one, they stab him to death. When Caesar sees his dear friend Brutus among his murderers, he gives up his struggle and dies.

The murderers bathe their hands and swords in Caesar's blood, thus bringing Calpurnia's premonition to fruition. Antony, having been led away on a false pretext, returns and pledges allegiance to Brutus but weeps over Caesar's body. He shakes hands with the conspirators, thus marking them all as guilty while appearing to make a gesture of conciliation. When Antony asks why they killed Caesar, Brutus replies that he will explain their purpose in a funeral oration. Antony asks to be allowed to speak over the body as well; Brutus grants his permission, though Cassius remains suspicious of Antony. The conspirators depart, and Antony, alone now, swears that Caesar's death shall be avenged.

Brutus and Cassius go to the Forum to speak to the public. Cassius exits to address another part of the crowd. Brutus declares to the masses that though he loved Caesar, he loves Rome more, and Caesar's ambition posed a danger to Roman liberty. The speech placates the crowd. Antony appears with Caesar's body, and Brutus departs after turning the pulpit over to Antony. Repeatedly referring to Brutus as "an honorable man," Antony's speech becomes increasingly sarcastic; questioning the claims that Brutus made in his speech that Caesar acted only out of ambition, Antony points out that Caesar brought much wealth and glory to Rome, and three times turned down offers of the crown. Antony then produces Caesar's will but announces that he will not read it for it would upset the people inordinately. The crowd nevertheless begs him to read the will, so he descends from the pulpit to stand next to Caesar's body. He describes Caesar's horrible death and shows Caesar's wounded body to the crowd. He then reads Caesar's will, which bequeaths a sum of money to every citizen and orders that his private gardens be made public. The crowd becomes enraged that this generous man lies dead; calling Brutus and Cassius traitors, the masses set off to drive them from the city.

Meanwhile, Caesar's adopted son and appointed successor, Octavius, arrives in Rome and forms a three-person coalition with Antony and Lepidus. They prepare to fight Cassius and Brutus, who have been driven into exile and are raising armies outside the city. At the conspirators' camp, Brutus and Cassius have a heated argument regarding matters of money and honor, but they ultimately reconcile. Brutus reveals that he is sick with grief, for in his absence Portia has killed herself. The two continue to prepare for battle with Antony and Octavius. That night, the Ghost of Caesar appears to Brutus, announcing that Brutus will meet him again on the battlefield.

Octavius and Antony march their army toward Brutus and Cassius. Antony tells Octavius where to attack, but Octavius says that he will make his own orders; he is already asserting his authority as the heir of Caesar and the next ruler of Rome. The opposing generals meet on the battlefield and exchange insults before beginning combat.

Cassius witnesses his own men fleeing and hears that Brutus's men are not performing effectively. Cassius sends one of his men, Pindarus, to see how matters are progressing. From afar, Pindarus sees one of their leaders, Cassius's best friend, Titinius, being surrounded by cheering troops and concludes that he has been captured. Cassius despairs and orders Pindarus to kill him with his own sword. He dies proclaiming that Caesar is avenged. Titinius himself then arrives—the men encircling him were actually his comrades, cheering a victory he had earned. Titinius sees Cassius's corpse and, mourning the death of his friend, kills himself.

Brutus learns of the deaths of Cassius and Titinius with a heavy heart and prepares to take on the Romans again. When his army loses, doom appears imminent. Brutus asks one of his men to hold his sword while he impales himself on it. Finally, Caesar can rest satisfied, he says as he dies. Octavius and Antony arrive. Antony speaks over Brutus's body, calling him the noblest Roman of all. While the other conspirators acted out of envy and ambition, he observes, Brutus genuinely believed that he acted for the benefit of Rome. Octavius orders that Brutus be buried in the most honorable way. The men then depart to celebrate their victory.

"Methought I Saw my Late Espoused Saint" is a sonnet by John Milton, also known as Sonnet XXIII, written in 1658 after the death of his second wife, Katherine Woodcock. The poem describes a dream where the speaker sees his deceased wife return, resembling Alcestis, who was returned to her husband from the grave. The vision fades as dawn breaks, leaving the speaker with a sense of grief and despair.

Elaboration:

The sonnet's title sets the scene for a dream experience where the speaker believes he has seen his deceased wife. The poem uses the figure of Alcestis, a Greek mythological figure who sacrificed herself to save her husband, to compare the speaker's wife's death and return in the dream, according to the British Literature Wiki. The poem emphasizes the purity and beauty of the wife in the dream, contrasting with the reality of her death and the loss of her presence in the speaker's life. The final lines express the pain of waking up from the dream and the return of the day, symbolizing the end of the brief respite and the enduring nature of grief, as described on the British Literature Wiki.

The first octave of 'Sonnet 23' contains the speaker's description of his vision. He saw his wife, in all her beauty. This did not scare him. Instead, it brought him pleasure and reminded him of Alcestis from Greek mythology. His wife appeared pure, covered in a veil, yet shining in all her normal beauty and grace. At the end of the poem, the speaker notes that he plans on seeing her face, with his full sight, once he joins her in heaven. The poem concludes with the speaker trying to embrace his wife and waking up from his dream, back into the world of darkness

In 'Sonnet 23,' Milton explores themes of the afterlife, loss, and reality. The first and the last of these come together in the poem to allow the speaker to see his wife as she is now. She's residing in Heaven, purified of any of the sins she might've had on Earth. This is especially poignant for the speaker since she died in childbirth. It's clear throughout 'Sonnet 23' that this woman's loss has had a powerful impact on the speaker. When she disappears at the end of the poem, he describes being thrust back into darkness. That is, the speaker alludes, to his primary state of being. It might be that only in dreams, in an altered state of reality, that he's able to find momentary happiness.

The moral of the story of Robinson Crusoe is that a person can succeed against all odds with the right combination of hard work, planning, thrift, resourcefulness, and religious faith.

Q.Discuss the relationship between Man Friday and Robinson Crusoe in the novel Robinson Crusoe.

The relationship between Man Friday and Robinson Crusoe in "Robinson Crusoe" is multifaceted, imbued with elements of master-slave dynamics and father-son intimacy. Crusoe, exerting superiority, names Friday, a common practice of masters in Defoe's era. However, Friday's servitude is seemingly rooted in gratitude, after being saved by Crusoe. Despite this, Crusoe regards Friday more as a loyal servant than an equal, often disregarding his ideas and contributions. The relationship thus oscillates between authoritarian and paternalistic tones.

Q.What happens at the end of Robinson Crusoe?

At the end of Robinson Crusoe, Crusoe and Friday are saved. They sail back to Europe on an English ship. Crusoe discovers that his investments have made him wealthy. He marries, has three children, and, after his wife dies, sets out on more traveling adventures.

Q.Robinson Crusoe's life, survival methods, and mindset on the island

Robinson Crusoe's life on the island involves significant changes in his survival methods and mindset. Initially overwhelmed, he quickly adapts by salvaging supplies, building shelter, and evolving from hunter-gatherer to agricultural producer. His solitary existence leads to a religious awakening, attributing his survival to Divine Intervention. He becomes evangelical, converting Friday. However, after leaving the island, his piety wanes, reflecting a pragmatic repentance influenced by his circumstances.

Q.What impacts does nature have on Robinson Crusoe?

In the novel, "Robinson Crusoe", nature serves as both a controller and a teacher to Crusoe. Despite his attempts to dominate it, Crusoe is often at the mercy of nature's power, as shown in the storm that strands him on the island. However, nature also provides him with resources for survival and teaches him humility and acceptance of his limitations. Crusoe's journey of self-discovery is largely through his interaction with nature, leading him to a deeper understanding of his existence and the true meaning of survival.

Q.What narrative techniques are used in Robinson Crusoe?

The narrative techniques in Robinson Crusoe include realistic fiction, autobiography, and spiritual autobiography. Crusoe narrates from his point of view, sharing biographical details and inner emotions, making him somewhat unreliable. The novel also follows the spiritual autobiography tradition, detailing Crusoe's conversion to Christianity. Additionally, Defoe employs realistic sea story elements and epistolary techniques, using Crusoe's diary to present an immediate and authentic experience.

Q.What are the main symbols in Robinson Crusoe?

Some of the primary symbols in Robinson Crusoe are money, the sea, the cross, the footprint, and the bower.

Q.Discuss the portrayal of racism in Robinson Crusoe by Daniel Defoe.

Racism was so engrained in the society of the early eighteenth century that most of the racist attitudes in Robinson Crusoe are quite unconscious. Crusoe engages in the slave trade, which he regards as a matter of course, and assumes that he is "king" of the island on which he is stranded. When he encounters Friday, he immediately assumes that their relations will be those of master and servant.

Q..Briefly explain the title of the fiction Robinson Crusoe

Or

Write the summary of this fiction

Or

Describe the main idea of this fiction

Or

write the central theme of this fiction

Robinson Crusoe follows its titular protagonist on his journey toward self-realization, religious acceptance, and physical survival. What Crusoe wants most changes over the course of the story; his initial desire is formed by his adventurous nature and fraught relationship with his family. As the youngest of three children, Crusoe harbors resentment for the lesser inheritance and lack of favoritism he receives. This resentment, as well as Crusoe's natural rebelliousness, drives him to the novel's inciting incident, in which he instead sets out to sea.

Following the inciting incident, Crusoe experiences many changing landscapes and obstacles which make up the novel's rising action. From his hometown, Crusoe sets off on a financially lucrative merchant trip to London, providing a temporary sense of hope that his decision to seek adventure may pay off. From London, however, Crusoe sets out to sea again and is captured and enslaved by North African pirates. Crusoe's enslavement is the first in a series of misfortunes that will motivate his future guilt and repentance. After escaping slavery, Crusoe experiences a brief respite from disaster as he meets a Portuguese captain who takes Crusoe to Brazil where he establishes a successful tobacco plantation. Influenced by his newfound success, Crusoe's greed motivates his decision to set sail again in hopes of procuring a number of slaves.

While on his way to buy the slaves, Crusoe's ship is destroyed in a storm. Crusoe is the only survivor of the wreckage, as both the crew and the ship were carried away into the ocean. Crusoe finds himself stranded ashore on an unknown island. This serves as a turning point for Crusoe's desires. Whereas his initial desire was to establish his independence from his family, Crusoe is now confronted with the consequences of his actions and his actions are fueled by dual motivations. On the one hand, Crusoe must reconcile his rebellious selfishness and decide whether his misfortunes are cosmic or religious punishments for his roguish behavior. On the other hand, Crusoe is now driven by the need to survive and return home. Each element of conflict in the novel follows one of three major literary conflicts that include Man versus Nature, Man versus Man, and Man versus God.

The narration explores Crusoe's physical motivations and desires through his interactions and clashes with the natural world of the island and other humans. Much of the novel explores Crusoe's growth as a survivalist. Crusoe finds the most success in his ability to conquer the natural world around him. From resource gathering and animal husbandry to the building of shelter and boats, Crusoe thoroughly acclimates to island life over his multi-decade stay. His desire for survival is largely fulfilled as Crusoe uses barley to make bread, domesticates island animals such as goats and parrots, and even builds a canoe. The only moments where it seems as if nature may threaten Crusoe's survival are during disasters like the earthquake and hurricane. Crusoe, however, escapes these misfortunes largely unscathed.

Unlike Crusoe's encounters with nature, his encounters with other humans are much more complex. Through evidence such as footprints, bones, and eventual sightings, Crusoe comes to learn of the presence of cannibalistic humans on or near the island. While the presence of the cannibals certainly puts Crusoe's life in danger, it also brings companionship. Characters such as the Spaniard and Friday, who originally are captives of the cannibals, come to devote their lives to Crusoe as subordinates after Crusoe saves them from their captors.

While Crusoe develops into a survivalist on his quest to ensure his health and safety, he also embarks on an emotional and religious journey towards reconciliation for his past. From the moment he lands on the island, Crusoe begins to struggle with religious guilt for his past decisions. The root of his guilt lies in the combination of his rebelliousness towards his family and the greed he exhibited once he left home. Spurred by a hallucination in which Crusoe is visited by an angelic figure who suggests his predicament is punishment for his ill deeds, Crusoe begins a quest to repent and grow closer to God. This quest motivates Crusoe to repent through prayer, read more scripture, and act charitably to other characters like Friday and the Spaniard.

The novel's conflict culminates in a climactic turning point as Crusoe finds himself rescued by an English ship. After nearly thirty years on the island, Crusoe returns home to find misfortune in the deaths of nearly his whole family. Although Crusoe feels he adequately repented for his actions, the consequences of his rebellion led to him losing his family while away, and gone with them is any opportunity to ask them for forgiveness. Despite his grief and his scarring experiences, the novel ends with Crusoe getting married and returning to Brazil to find his tobacco plantation brimming with success.

The distinguished country gentleman Allworthy, who lives in Somersetshire with his unmarried sister Bridget Allworthy, arrives home from a trip to London to discover a baby boy in his bed. Allworthy undertakes to uncover the mother and father of this foundling, and finds local woman Jenny Jones and her tutor, Mr. Partridge, guilty. Allworthy sends Jenny away from the county, and the poverty-stricken Partridge leaves of his own accord. In spite of the criticism of the parish, Allworthy decides to bring up the boy. Soon after, Bridget marries Captain Blifil, a visitor at Allworthy's estate, and gives birth to a son of her own, named Blifil. Captain Blifil regards Tom Jones with jealousy, since he wishes his son to inherit all of Allworthy possessions. While meditating on money matters, Captain Blifil falls dead of an apoplexy.

The narrator skips forward twelve years. Blifil and Tom Jones have been brought up together, but receive vastly different treatment from the other members of the household. Allworthy is the only person who shows consistent affection for Tom. The philosopher Square and the reverend Thwackum, the boys' tutors, despise Tom and adore Blifil, since Tom is wild and Blifil is pious. Tom frequently steals apples and ducks to support the family of Black George, one of Allworthy's servants. Tom tells all of his secrets to Blifil, who then relates these to Thwackum or Allworthy, thereby getting Tom into trouble. The people of the parish, hearing of Tom's generosity to Black George, begin to speak kindly of Tom while condemning Blifil for his sneakiness.

Tom spends much time with Squire Western—Allworthy's neighbor—since the Squire is impressed by Tom's sportsmanship. Sophia Western, Squire Western's daughter, falls deeply in love with Tom. Tom has already bestowed his affection on Molly Seagrim, the poor but feisty daughter of Black George. When Molly becomes pregnant, Tom prevents Allworthy from sending Molly to prison by admitting that he has fathered her child. Tom, at first oblivious to Sophia's charms and beauty, falls deeply in love with her, and begins to resent his ties to Molly. Yet he remains with Molly out of honor. Tom's commitment to Molly ends when he discovers that she has been having affairs, which means Tom is not the father of her child and frees him to confess his feelings to Sophia.

Allworthy falls gravely ill and summons his family and friends to be near him. He reads out his will, which states that Blifil will inherit most of his estate, although Tom is also provided for. Thwackum and Square are upset that they are each promised only a thousand pounds. Tom experiences great emotion at Allworthy's illness and barely leaves his bedside. A lawyer named Dowling arrives and announces the sudden and unexpected death of Bridget Allworthy. When the doctor announces that Allworthy will not die, Tom rejoices and gets drunk on both joy and alcohol. Blifil calls Tom a "bastard" and Tom retaliates by hitting him. Tom, after swearing eternal constancy to Sophia, encounters Molly by chance and makes love to her.

Mrs. Western, the aunt with whom Sophia spent much of her youth, comes to stay at her brother's house. She and the Squire fight constantly, but they unite over Mrs. Western's plan to marry Sophia to Blifil. Mrs. Western promises not to reveal Sophia's love for Tom as long as Sophia submits to receiving Blifil as a suitor. Blifil thus begins his courtship of Sophia, and brags so much about his progress that Allworthy believes that Sophia must love Blifil. Sophia, however, strongly opposes the proposal, and Squire Western grows violent with her. Blifil tells Allworthy that Tom is a rascal who cavorted drunkenly about the house, and Allworthy banishes Tom from the county. Tom does not want to leave Sophia, but decides that he must follow the honorable path.

Tom begins to wander about the countryside. In Bristol, he happens to meet up with Partridge, who becomes his loyal servant. Tom also rescues a Mrs. Waters from being robbed, and they begin an affair at a local inn. Sophia, who has run away from Squire Western's estate to avoid marrying Blifil, stops at this inn and discovers that Tom is having an affair with Mrs. Waters. She leaves her muff in Tom's bed so that he knows she has been there. When Tom finds the muff, he frantically sets out in pursuit of Sophia. The Irishman Fitzpatrick arrives at the inn searching for his wife, and Western arrives searching for Sophia.

On the way to London, Sophia rides with her cousin Harriet, who is also Fitzpatrick's wife. In London, Sophia stays with her lady relative Lady Bellaston. Tom and Partridge arrive in London soon after, and they stay in the house of Mrs. Miller and her daughters, one of whom is named Nancy. A young gentleman called Nightingale also inhabits the house, and Tom soon realizes that he and Nancy are in love. Nancy falls pregnant and Tom convinces Nightingale to marry her. Lady Bellaston and Tom begin an affair, although Tom privately continues to pursue Sophia. When he and Sophia are reconciled, Tom breaks off the relationship with Lady Bellaston by sending her a marriage proposal that scares her away. Yet Lady Bellaston is still determined not to allow Sophia and Tom's love to flourish. She encourages another young man, Lord Fellamar, to rape Sophia.

Soon after, Squire Western, Mrs. Western, Blifil, and Allworthy arrive in London, and Squire Western locks Sophia in her bedroom. Mr. Fitzpatrick thinks Tom is his wife's lover and begins a duel with Tom. In defending himself, Tom stabs Fitzpatrick with the sword and is thrown into jail. Partridge visits Tom in jail with the ghastly news that Mrs. Waters is Jenny Jones, Tom's mother. Mrs. Waters meets with Allworthy and explains that Fitzpatrick is still alive, and has admitted to initiating the duel. She also tells Allworthy that a lawyer acting on behalf of an unnamed gentleman tried to persuade her to conspire against Tom. Allworthy realizes that Blifil is this very gentleman, and he decides never to speak to him again. Tom, however, takes pity on Blifil and provides him with an annuity.

Mrs. Waters also reveals that Tom's mother was Bridget Allworthy. Square sends Allworthy a letter explaining that Tom's conduct during Allworthy's illness was honorable and compassionate. Tom is released from jail and he and Allworthy are reunited as nephew and uncle. Mrs. Miller explains to Sophia the reasons for Tom's marriage proposal to Lady Bellaston, and Sophia is satisfied. Now that Tom is Allworthy's heir, Squire Western eagerly encourages the marriage between Tom and Sophia. Sophia chastises Tom for his lack of chastity, but agrees to marry him. They live happily on Western's estate with two children, and shower everyone around them with kindness and generosity.
